The Army-Air Force Exchange Service has provided more than $56,000,000 during the past 12 months for military morale activities throughout the world. This is money that otherwise would have to be appropriated by Congress. There are new trends in PX purchases with an increase in family-type items.

Demands are mounting within the Congress to give the Army a bigger slice of the military budget to boost the ranks of the ground forces, to speed new equipment into Pentomic divisions and to broaden the Army's role in the space-age, also the House Armed Services Committee has urged Secretary of Defense McElroy to give the Army full responsibility for development and operation of the Nike-Zeus anti-missile.

Will The Cordiner Concept Prevail? "Pay For Merit" Faces Rocky Road

CONCERN is growing among Department of Defense leaders that the step-in-grade "pay for merit" building block of the $518,000,000 military pay bill may be overturned on Capitol Hill.

There are reports that influential efforts will be made in Congress to retain the historic longevity system—with some modifications—instead of the time in grade approach proposed by the Cordiner Committee and endorsed by the Administration.

As THE JOURNAL went to press, a definite date for the start of the pay hearings had yet to be set, but Representative Paul J. Kilday (D-Tex) said his subcommittee is shooting for a mid-February "target date."

The importance of the pay legislation is demonstrated in this statement by Mr. Kilday.

Chairman Carl Vinson (D-Ga) of the House Armed Services Committee had indicated in a newly released transcript of closed-door hearings that he desired the subcommittees, including Mr. Kilday's group, to defer action on legislative matters, such as pay, until after the full committee had completed its sweeping inquiry into defense problems, probably in about a month.

Representative Kilday apparently has

50,000 Officers Win Promotion In FY '59; Army Asks Added General Officer Billets

Navy-USMC Plans, Page 6

THE Services will promote 50,000 officers during the coming fiscal year, including 105 to new general and flag ranks.

Of the total flag and general officer promotions, 22 will go to Army officers, 33 to Navy, 39 to Air Force, and 11 to Marine Corps officers.

In addition, the Army is appealing for authority to add 89 more stars to its officer structure.

Officer promotions in all four Services during fiscal '59, which gets underway next July, will total 50,027. Here is the breakdown of promotions planned by each Service by rank:

	Army	Navy	Air Force	Marine Corps
To General or Flag Rank	22	33	39	11
To Colonel/Captain	318	334	320	127
To Lt Col/Cdr	370	801	960	197
To Maj/LCDR	401	2,212	2,000	196
To Capt/Lt	1,427	2,213	5,964	661
To 1st Lt/Lt (Jg)	10,445	9,275	9,412	2,289
TOTAL	12,983	14,868	18,695	3,481

In reporting promotion plans for the coming fiscal year, the Army told the House and Senate Armed Services Committees that the Officer Grade Limitations Act will permit the Army to have only 474 general officers during fiscal '59, but there will be a requirement for 563 general officers, or 89 over the maximum authorized.

The Army said it is "experiencing a continually increasing demand for general officers to fill positions in Joint Activities, MAAG's, Missions, Civilian Agencies, etc.; not in direct support of the U. S. Army structure," and that it believes present law "does not adequately provide for these extra-service requirements."

To support this statement, the Army pointed out that 87 of its generals are now filling positions "in these extra-service areas," and requests have been received for 12 more officers to be assigned to such jobs. This could only be done, the Army said, by "withdrawing support from an equal number of strictly U. S. Army positions."

The Army, Navy and Marine Corps all noted that their programmed general and flag officer plans are under review in the Office of the Secretary of Defense.

Details about Air Force promotion plans were told in THE JOURNAL 25 January, page 8.

Additional details about Army, Navy and Marine Corps promotions are shown in charts published in this issue on pages 4 and 6.

Marine Corps "Reluctantly" Asks Congress To Authorize Lawyer Promotion List

The Marine Corps has asked Congress for authority to establish a separate promotion list for legal officers.

Brig. Gen. James P. Berkeley, Marine Corps G-1 and Manpower Coordinator, said that the Corps "reluctantly" decided to seek a separate law specialist category.

Recent Court of Military Appeals decisions, coupled with a shortage of Marine lawyers, dictated the necessity for a specialized group similar to the Corps' Supply Duty Only category.

Budget Rider Hurts

General Berkeley said that part of the difficulty now being faced by the Marine Corps can be traced to an Appropriations Act of several years ago which barred all the Armed Forces from sending officers to school for legal training.

Before the Congressional prohibition, the Marines sent officers to night school at civilian colleges. While these officers were undergoing training they worked during the day in JAG offices.

This was before the advent of the Uniform Code of Military Justice and the number of officers trained at civilian universities "adequately met the requirement for the small size of the Marine Corps."

The prohibition against sending officers to law schools and the passage of UCMJ, the General explained, came at about the same time and, as a result, the situation deteriorated "bit by bit."

Appeals Court Impact

The legal service picture has been muddled further by recent Court of Military Appeals decision, particularly in the case of the United States v. Tomaszewski. In this case, the Court reversed the General Court Martial conviction of T/Sgt. Stanley J. Tomaszewski, USAF, on the grounds that he was not represented at the Article 32 investigation by a defense counsel who was qualified within the meaning of the Uniform Code, Article 27 (b).

The upshot of this decision is that all pre-trial investigations of accused persons facing General Court Martial must be made by certified lawyers, at the request of the defendant. In the past, investigations could be made by any officer properly appointed.

General Berkeley points out that under this ruling, the difficulty is that it is not possible to determine if a man should be tried by a General Courts-Martial until an investigation is made. In other words, the only way to be sure that convictions will not be overturned, is to have all pre-trial investigations conducted by certified lawyers.

Workload Is Increased

This means that the workload of Marine lawyers will be substantially increased.

Under these conditions, the Manpower Coordinator stated "it is possible that their chances of promotion would lessen if they were restricted to legal officer duties and had to compete with Line officers."

The General said that the only way the Corps could overcome this predicament would be to have enough lawyers to rotate them between Line and legal duties.

At present, the Marine Corps has only

96 Regular lawyers on board and a billet requirement for 138.

Faced with an existing shortage of 42 lawyers, the General pointed out that it would be almost impossible to procure enough lawyers to permit a rotational plan between Line and legal duties.

A rotation plan would require the Corps to have on board three times the current billet need of 138 legal specialists. Such a plan would require an input of 28 new Regular officers annually.

That this is an impossible goal is shown by the fact that the Marine Corps was able to procure only one Regular lawyer during the past three years.

Only Alternative

The only alternative left to the Marine Corps, General Berkeley told THE JOURNAL, was to seek an amendment to the Officer Personnel Act which will grant permission to have a separate legal group which will be able to handle the increased workloads.

If Congress gives its approval—the Marine Corps-drafted bill has cleared the Defense Department and the Bureau of the Budget—here's the way it would be implemented:

- The Corps would give all lawyers an opportunity to remain in the Line category (General Berkeley emphasized that lawyers would not be forced to practice law if their preference is for Line duty);
- All active duty Reserve officers below the rank of major would be given a chance to integrate and be placed in the new legal category;
- The Corps would aim for an annual procurement of about 10 lawyers per year to maintain a steady flow of law specialists. These lawyers would enter the Marine Corps in the rank of first lieutenant.

All lawyers entering the Marine Corps would be sent to Basic School at the Marine Corps Schools, Quantico, Va., where they would be trained in the missions and traditions of the Corps. "Under the Marine concept," General Berkeley said, "lawyers would understand the Marine philosophy."

As young lawyers gain experience and attain higher ranks they would be sent to the Junior and Senior Schools, and perhaps to Armed Service Staff Schools.

General Officer Billet

The legislative proposal contains a provision for a flag-rank officer who will hold the title of "Legal Assistant to the Commandant," or a similar title. General Berkeley said he did not know if the one-star officer would be immediately named following passage of the bill. The provision was included, he said, to provide an outlet for advancement.

A breakdown of the number of Regular lawyers on board and the numbers needed, by rank, shows the critical situation being faced by the Marine Corps.

	On Board	Need
Col.	5	4
Lt. Col.	37	21
Maj.	45	37
Capt.	5	49
1st Lt.	4	27

The table shows the Corps is top-heavy in senior ranks and critically short of replacements. Until Congress acts, the Corps "will have to live with" the situation, General Berkeley said. He said enactment of the bill will not mean senior lawyers will be forced out against their will. They will face only the same attrition rate as Line officers.

SecNav Puts Decision-Making Delays At Feet Of Asst. Secretaries, Committees

Delays and "disorder" in Pentagon decision making have been laid at the feet of the Assistant Secretaries of Defense, Defense Department Committees and the Bureau of the Budget.

An admission that these offices and organizations create stumbling blocks for the military departments was made by Secretary of the Navy Thomas S. Gates during House Armed Services Committee testimony released on 5 February.

In answer to questions, Secretary Gates agreed that the longest delays are created by the committee system.

But, he said the delays come not only "from the various committees that exist but also from the staff organizations of the Assistant Secretaries of Defense" which "review the propositions."

He told the committee, "I don't want to particularly blame committees. I blame reviewing groups of people, some of whom work directly for an Assistant Secretary of Defense and some of whom are on an ad hoc basis on a committee."

He agreed with a statement that the Assistant Secretaries of Defense who were created "to help expedite matters" seem "to have had a tendency to slow down affairs rather than to expedite."

The Navy Secretary said, "Of course you must remember these are very difficult decisions and in many cases these decisions require grave judgment and grave risk and of the 60-40 variety. You can't ever be quite sure sometimes you are correct."

"But the process of review within the Department of Defense is a very long and tortuous one."

Representative William H. Bates (R. Mass.) said it appears "that many of the functions that are exercised are not much more than crossing t's and dotting i's. And a lot of these committees and committees on committees might well be discharged from their responsibilities and we would get the job done a lot faster and with just as sound judgment."

Secretary Gates agreed that perhaps something should be done to eliminate the committees or expedite their work.

As for the Budget Bureau, he said Bureau personnel who act on Defense Department appropriations "are not military-trained people who are qualified to appraise military programs."

He said "there have been great delays" at times in getting money from the Bureau of the Budget or the Defense Department comptroller despite the fact that the money has been appropriated by Congress.

Asked if he found this harmful to Navy programs, he said there is no question "that when there is delay in apportionment it is a more disorderly way of doing business than it would be if you had your money and you could go ahead with your procurement or whatever the money was supposed to be applied for. There is no question about the fact that it does stretch out and delay the delivery of end items. And in some cases ultimately it proves to be an expensive way of doing business."

Legal Ruling Ends Rent Reduction Hopes For Some Families; BoB Continues Delay

A new Pentagon legal ruling spells the end to hopes for reduced rentals for some of the 36,000 military families living in substandard housing.

This is the latest development in the long-delayed rent reduction program, still hanging fire at the Bureau of the Budget. More than six months have elapsed since the substandard quarters legislation was enacted by the Congress and signed into law by the President.

Military families, meanwhile, are losing more than $1 million each month as a result of failures by the Pentagon and the Budget Bureau to put the law into effect.

The implementing instructions were held up for more than three and one-half months at the Pentagon. Even after the "final" draft was completed and sent to the Budget Bureau on 13 December, however, the Defense Department found it necessary to re-draft the "final" paper.

Prepare New Draft

Several revisions were incorporated in a "new draft" which went to the Budget on 15 January. One change benefits military families by making the rent reductions retroactive to 1 January 1958 (THE JOURNAL, 25 January). Another revision wipes out earlier assurances that all families living in substandard quarters would receive at least a token reduction in rent.

The 13 December draft provided that, in no case, would families be charged rents totalling more than 90 per cent of their basic allowance for quarters if the quarters to which they are assigned are declared substandard.

The Counsel's Ruling

Later, Defense Department General Counsel Robert Dechert ruled that such a step would be illegal. He said if a set of quarters is determined to be substandard, but the going rate for similar housing in the local community is equal to or more than the family's basic allowances for quarters, then the family must continue to forfeit their entire BAQ.

This change has been incorporated into the new draft, which is still undergoing Budget Bureau appraisal. The plan now reads that rents for substandard quarters shall not exceed the basic allowance for quarters.

A Defense Department spokesman said there is new hope that the Budget Bureau will complete action on the program by the middle of the month. The Executive Order putting the law into effect is expected to delegate authority to the Budget Bureau to oversee the program.

Cites Expedited Handling

At the Capitol, meanwhile, Representative Charles E. Bennett (D-Fla.), who sponsored the rent-reduction plan, said he has been advised by Assistant Secretary of Defense Floyd S. Bryant that Pentagon efforts to put the law into operation have been handled "as expeditiously as possible."

In a letter to Congressman Bennett, Secretary Bryant said that although the delays "may appear unjustified to those who are immediately involved," they "appear normal within our own organization."

Congressman Bennett, a member of the House Armed Services Committee, has been moving quietly behind the scenes in an effort to speed up implementation of the law.

His correspondence on the subject with ranking Defense Department officials shows that Secretary of the Navy Thomas S. Gates, Jr., believes the Pentagon draft rules express a "narrow view." He has advised Congressman Bennett that the Navy did not contribute "either to the delay in preparing the implementation nor in the narrow view expressed in the draft."

Five Colonels Honored At Industrial College

Five high-ranking students at the Industrial College of the Armed Forces have received honors from the Commandant well before their year-long class will be over.

The honors consisted of Legion of Merit and Commendation Ribbon awards for outstanding performance in their pre-school billets. They were presented by Lt. Gen. George W. Mundy, USAF, Commandant of the College, in ceremonies at Ft. McNair, 27 January.

Receiving Legion of Merit awards were Colonels Roy W. Gustafson and Robert A. Barrere, USAF. Colonel Gustafson was cited for his "exceptionally meritorious service" as Executive to the Assistant Secretary of the Air Force from 1955 to 1957. Colonel Barrere was honored for his work as Director of Engineering Standards and Chief of the Aeronautical Accessories Laboratory, Wright-Patterson AFB, Ohio.

Commendation Ribbons were awarded to: Col. Bernardino O. Tortora, USAF, former Director of Materiel, 19th Air Division; Col. Howard K. Eggleston, USA, former Commander of the Engineer Supply Control Office, St. Louis, Mo.; and Col. Sterling C. Bush, USA, former Commander of the Lexington, Ky., Signal Depot.

All will complete their course at the College in June.

GENERAL'S MOVE

Brig. Gen. Charles S. D'Orsa, Assistant Chief of Staff, Plans and Operations, Allied Forces, Southern Europe, has been assigned to Headquarters, U. S. Army Europe.

Brig. Gen. Roland H. del Mar, Assistant Division Commander, 4th Armored Division, U. S. Army Europe, goes to U. S. Army Element, Headquarters, Allied Forces, Southern Europe.

Both report in June.

Chamber Of Commerce Endorses DoD Pay Bill

The U. S. Chamber of Commerce will support the Service pay plan as sent to Congress by the Department of Defense, including the $518 million necessary to put it into effect the first year.

Last Spring representatives of the Chamber told Congress that they favored the recommendations in the Cordiner Report, but they back President Eisenhower in his opposition to spending money on it at that time.

Start Set For USNA Stadium

Secretary of the Navy Thomas S. Gates, Jr., will turn the first spadeful of earth at ceremonies marking the start of construction on the Navy-Marine Corps Stadium at Annapolis on 1 March.

The structure will cost $2,900,000.

Officials report that the memorial fund still is short $700,000.

Construction plans call for a stadium that will hold 28,000 spectators with completion set by 15 August 1959.

The first game in the new stadium will be against William & Mary College in the Fall of 1959.

New BUORD Chief; Army Billet Still Open

President Eisenhower has nominated RAdm. Paul D. Stroop to be chief of the Bureau of Ordnance for a four-year term.

Admiral Stroop, who has been Commander U. S. Taiwan Patrol Force, will replace RAdm. Frank S. Withington who becomes Commander Naval Forces Japan.

The President has yet to nominate a successor for Lt. Gen. Emerson L. Cummings, who has been reassigned to the Far East, to be Army Chief of Ordnance.

Services Study Proposed Legislation For Sweeping Personnel Action Changes

The Army, Navy, Air Force and Marine Corps this week were studying a proposal for legislation that would make important changes in manpower management and which would affect the careers of all officers.

The recommended changes, embodied in a paper now under consideration, are linked to the military pay bill.

It is recalled that the Cordiner Committee said last year that maximum utilization of manpower can be achieved only by enactment of a new pay system and by the parallel implementation of new controls to vitalize career opportunities.

Details of the proposed personnel changes were described exclusively in last week's issue of THE JOURNAL.

They include plans for selection-for-retention of all officers, Regulars and Reserves, in all the Services after 20 years service; forced retirement for permanent officers in lieutenant colonel or commander rank after 26 years service and 5 years in permanent grade, instead of 28 at present, and similar retirement for brigadier generals and rear admirals after 30 and 5.

The Services confirmed the fact this week that they had been asked to study the proposals, but declined to make any comments until after the Secretaries of the Army, Navy, and Air Force had an opportunity to report viewpoints to Secretary of Defense Neil H. McElroy.

On the basis of past actions, it would appear probable that the Navy and Air Force would be more in favor of the new proposals than the Army.

The Navy, for example, has asked Congress to approve so-called "hump" legislation that would accelerate retirement of commanders and captains, but which would give them "constructive credit" for the shortened periods of service.

The Army for a long time has had in effect a policy of selecting for retention Reserve officers with 20 years service, but not Regulars.

It remains to be seen whether Secretary McElroy and the Service Secretaries can get together on a legislative proposal that can gain some measure of unanimity at the Pentagon, then win Budget Bureau approval, and finally be acceptable to the Armed Services Committees.

Obviously, the proposed changes would add persons to the retirement rolls and thus raise the cost of retired pay—a problem that has occasioned considerable Congressional comment.

At the same time, however, a number of Members of Congress reportedly have stressed the need for vitalization of the officer ranks in order to give outstanding officers more opportunities for advancement and higher responsibilities.

This latter objective would be recognized if the Defense Department recommends that authority be granted for out-of-line permanent promotions, as is now the case for temporary promotions.

Chairman Brooks Calls Staff Conference On Term-Retention Contract Legislation

COL. CLYDE BOX, USAF (left), Commander, 322d Air Division, Evreux, France, admires a framed certificate making him the first Airman to become an Honorary Eagle of the 2d Airborne Battle Group, 502d Infantry, 11th Airborne Division. Col. George O. McCafferty, USAF (right), Deputy for Operations, 317th Troop Carrier Wing, presented the certificate to Col. Box on behalf of Col. Wallace M. Hanes, USA, who commands the 2d Airborne Battle Group.

CHAIRMAN Overton Brooks (D-La.) of the House Armed Services Subcommittee on Reserve Affairs has announced that he will begin staff conferences on 10 February on the Defense Department proposal to provide term-retention contracts for Reserve officers.

The multi-million dollar plan would establish a new system under which Reserve officers would be given iron-clad contracts for specified periods of service. The proposal also would boost the lump sum payments which now go to Reserve officers who are involuntarily released from active duty.

Congressman Brooks' committee just recently completed a study of the current reductions-in-force which are resulting in thousands of Reserve officers being dropped from the active ranks of the Armed Forces. Some Pentagon witnesses who testified at the RIF hearings urged that the increased lump-sum payments recommended under the term-retention plan be made retroactive to cover this group.

The term-retention contract proposal was recommended by the Cordiner Committee but was divorced from the other Cordiner proposals after they reached the Capitol, in order that the Reserve legislation might be considered separately.

Chairman Brooks and Mr. Charles F. Ducander, the subcommittee counsel, will meet with Defense Department officials next week to study the legislation. The purpose of the staff conferences will be to prepare a "committee print" which can be referred to the full subcommittee at hearings which are expected to begin later this month, probably about 17 February.

Army Aviation Shows Its Aerial Fire Power to Pentagon Leaders and Pres.

Visitors from the Pentagon and representatives of the press, radio and TV were given a demonstration of Army Aviation's fire might and flexibility by a platoon of Sky Cavalry at Ft. Rucker, Ala., recently.

Watching the demonstration, accompanied by Brig. Gen. Bogardus S. Cairns, commanding general of the Army Aviation Center, were: Lt. Gen. Clyde D. Eddleman, Deputy Chief of Staff, for Operations, and Brig. Gen. Ernest F. Easterbrook, Director of Army Aviation.

Armed Army helicopters, from the small Bell H-13 "Sioux" reconnaissance aircraft to the massive troop carrier H-34 "Chocaw," tree-hopped, dodged and displayed tactical versatility while pouring a devastating rain of machine gun and rocket fire into simulated enemy bunkers and troops.

The H-13 "Sioux," armed with four .50 caliber machine guns and six 2.75 Aerial rockets, displayed its fire capabilities and utilization of terrain features as the pilot came in behind cover for deception and surprise and blasted the enemy with machine gun fire in ripples of 100 milliseconds intervals and with dockets.

Heaviest armed of the 'copters was the Sikorsky H-19 "Chickasaw" which delivered an anti-personnel suppressive fire from two .30 caliber machine guns and 132 aerial rockets.

The armament of the whirlybirds is undergoing experiments which are being evaluated for feasibility and possible tactical application. The Army says they are designed primarily as defensive purposes and are not meant to replace tactical air support furnished by the Air Force.

RCA ELECTRONICS KEEPS A RADAR "WEATHER EYE" ON YOUR COMFORT ON THE GREAT AIRLINES

Flying into a starless night, the pilot's vision may reach a mere 50 yards. Yet he clearly sees a storm brewing 150 miles straight ahead.

Within minutes he plots a slight change in course and flies a smooth, safe corridor through the weather. His passengers complete their trip in comfort and on schedule.

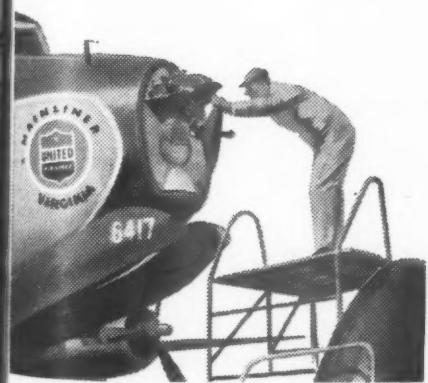

Credit RCA Electronics for the "Weather Eye" radar that makes all this possible. And the United Air Lines' all-radar fleet for being the first (among 24 leading world airlines)

Soviet Sub Capability Likened To Air Power Of Reds By Admiral Wright

Admiral Jerald Wright, USN, Commander-in-Chief, Atlantic and U. S. Atlantic Fleet and Supreme Allied Commander Atlantic, has assigned "about the same capability" to the Russian submarine force "as we assign to the Soviet Air Force."

Speaking to members of the Washington, D. C., Political Science Association, 30 January, he noted that the Russian submarines were both effective and well-manned.

The Russians have between 450 and 500 "effective" submarines, he said—"none in mothballs."

These fall into three main classes:

• "W-Boats," copies of the German WW II Type-21, which have been mass produced, are effective and well manned. Their range extends to Cape Hatteras or the Azores.

• "Zebra Class," in lesser numbers, which were designed by the Russians with East-German know-how. These, he said, are larger boats and will reach farther into the Caribbean.

• "Q-boats" with very much shorter range for use in the North Atlantic, North Sea areas.

Admiral Wright said that he assumed the Russians are developing an atomic submarine, and that they either "do have or will shortly have a submarine with guided missile capability."

The greater number of Soviet submarines, Admiral Wright said, are deployed near Northern Russia. Lesser numbers are deployed in the Baltic and Black Seas. The number of Russian submarines in the Pacific is far less than in the Atlantic, but is increasing, he said.

OLDEST MISSION

The Military Air Transport Service will lose its oldest mission, the global ferrying of aircraft, with the March inactivation of the 1708th Ferrying Wing at Kelly AFB, Tex.

As a tribute to the unit's outstanding record, the Wing has received the Air Force's Outstanding Unit Award. The certificate and flag streamer were presented at ceremonies 25 January by Maj. Gen. Frederic E. Glantzberg to Col. Russell F. Fisher, Wing Commander.

From the time it was activated in 1950 until the beginning of this year, the Wing has made over 39,000 aircraft deliveries around the world. These ranged from the relatively ancient T-6 to the supersonic F-100 and included Army helicopters and Navy patrol bombers.

Civilian Pilots Take B-47 Jet Courses

McConnell AFB, Kans., has graduated six pilots from United and Trans World Airlines from its B-47 jet indoctrination course.

During the 15 day program, the commercial pilots received academic, flight simulator and flying training. Each of the graduates will be concerned with the transition of other company pilots to jet aircraft.

McConnell authorities said that the course should help considerably to reduce the lead time for commercial jet aviation.

Col. E. F. Arnold Heads 15th AF Operations

Colonel Arnold has been on the staff of the 15th Air Force operations directorate since May 1955. He served as Chief, training division, until March 1956, when he was appointed Deputy Director of Operations, the post he held before being named director.

Personnel Turnover Perils Efficiency Of ADC; "We're Training for Attrition"

HQ., AIR DEFENSE COMMAND
ENT AFB, COLO.

SEVENTY-EIGHT per cent of the ADC's fire control technicians whose four-year enlistment expired in 1957 failed to reenlist. It will take $17-million in training costs to replace them.

Seventy-two per cent of the eligible jet engine mechanics failed to reenlist. It will cost $11 in training costs to put other men in their jobs.

Seventy-four per cent of ADC's fighter interceptor pilots eligible for separation in 1957 left to return to civilian life. It will cost $37,000,000 to train pilots to take their places.

Of all ADC airmen whose enlistments expired last year 65 per cent, or 11,500, left the service. It will take $176 million in training costs to train their replacements.

Brig. Gen. Greene

figures his losses will be excessive. But he does not count our weapons alone; he is smart enough to take into consideration the men who care for them and operate them. If this personnel capability is not at its highest he might well strike. This is a real, sobering threat."

ACW Endangered

Every phase of ADC suffers in some important manner from the effects of short-time personnel. In the Air Control and Warning section, for example, they relate that their turn-over problem is aggravated by the remote locations of the ACW installations which greatly discourages men from reenlisting. In one series of SAC tests, officers recall, SAC bombers made good scores in penetrating to target against inexperienced ACW operators, but when the same tests were tried against ACW teams at the Air Proving Ground, where their most experienced operators are located, every bomber was intercepted at least twice.

SAC officials were so amazed at the performance, the officers relate, that they sent to the APG location and wanted to know what new kind of ACW equipment was located there. But the fact was, it is told, that there was no new equipment; the amazing difference in performance was due entirely to the fact that experienced men were running the equipment.

General Greene, whose office is often referred to as "Greene's Body Shop," points out that the excellent machinery now on hand is not always fully utilized or maintained because the men assigned have not had enough training to understand it or even how to operate and maintain it.

Lose To Industry

"We are continually losing highly skilled men to industry, especially those in the electronic and other technical fields. This is not a new situation. But my concern is that the situation is getting worse."

"As we go on from year to year," he pointed out, "our inventory is getting more complex. For example, in aircraft we have the F-104 and the F-106 coming in soon. We have a complete new family of guided air rockets—the GAR family. The GAR 1, 2, 3 and 4. Each of these is an entirely different rocket. We have a guided missile, the Sidewinder. We have the MB-1 which is the atomic rocket, and we have a complete new weapons system called the BOMARC. All of these systems take many more people, highly skilled people, to maintain and operate them."

Atomic Peril

Col. Sidney C. Bruce, Chief of the Atomic Energy office of the Air Defense Command, told THE JOURNAL that it is imperative that there be stability in the Air Force personnel who have charge of the atomic warheads now in the hands of the Command.

"We must have experienced men," he declared, "to handle the fire control, the handling procedures, loading and storage for atomic weapons. I do not say how this should be brought about, the Cordiner bill may be the answer, but I do say that our very future depends upon being able to keep experienced men in this field for years to come."

"Our only solution to the disaster of atomic war," Colonel Bruce said, "is to prevent it from ever starting. The enemy is constantly assessing our capability. He will not strike if he

Need Grows

"Now let's look at the trend of our requirements for electronics maintenance people. Back in 1953, 54 and 55 time period we required approximately 6,000 people in the electronics maintenance field alone. As we progressed to 1956 with more complex airplanes coming into the inventory, our requirement almost doubled. Today we have a big increase, 16,000. We have further projected our requirements out to where in 1961 we will need almost 21,000 electronic maintenance people alone. I am not talking about any system other than the electronics field and only for the Air Defense Command."

"What good is it," General Greene concluded, "to appropriate billions of additional dollars for hardware if you are unable to keep the training and skilled folks necessary to maintain and operate it!"

Materiel Managers Cut Tonnage Needs

Air Force directors of materiel and supply of the major commands heard Maj. Gen. Charles J. Bondley, Jr., Director of Supply and Services, Hq, USAF, outline 28 January the details of an improved logistics system.

Under rigid test at 30 SAC bases since March 1954, the new system is aimed at reducing both the total number of inventory items stocked at a base and the level of those items to a minimum compatible with maintaining combat readiness. Inventory identified as excess to the needs of a base is freed for redistribution or sale as surplus.

During the test period, SAC bases accomplished an inventory reduction of 10,900 tons, representing an estimated cost of nearly $150 million. The number of SAC aircraft which was inoperative due to lack of parts dropped nearly 6 per cent. The rate of aircraft grounded awaiting parts is one measure of supply effectiveness, General Bondley noted.

He stated that the program, which marks another step to gear supply procedures to advances in rapid communications and air transportation is now being applied throughout the Air Force.

AD POSES SUDSY PAY QUESTION

A question concerning the proposed military pay raise brought hilarious laughter during recent House Armed Services Committee hearings.

The interrogator was Representative Paul J. Kilday (D-Tex), who will head the pay-bill study on Capitol Hill. He was questioning Secretary of Defense Neil H. McElroy, former President of Procter & Gamble.

Congressman Kilday called Secretary McElroy's attention to an advertisement appearing in a Service publication, which read: "Successful company offers you the best opportunity for a successful career."

Mr. Kilday—Do you think if we increase military pay, this sort of competition is going to be eliminated? . . .

Secretary McElroy—Well, I don't know, Mr. Kilday. I doubt if this will be eliminated. At the same time, it is our belief that what we are proposing will reap a distinct improvement in the competitiveness of the military career against an industrial career. I was afraid you were going to show me a Procter & Gamble advertisement.

Mr. Kilday—I did.

Secretary McElroy—I didn't know whether it was or not. (Laughter) I no longer work for that company, Mr. Kilday.

TIME-TESTED PROTECTION

GPM was founded in 1934 to serve the military with protection when it was most needed. Since 1934, our country has been engaged in two major wars. During this time, GPM has given to servicemen and their families the protection needed—paying more than $6,500,000 to beneficiaries and policyholders. Today, we are larger and more sound than ever before, serving approximately 60,000 policyholders with nearly $170,000,000 in insurance.

Incentives. While the Senate and House Armed Services Committees mark time on the modified Cordiner Plan which the Department of Defense finally pried loose from a reluctant Bureau of the Budget, the members might well take a look at the importance which successful American business firms put on monetary incentives for their executives.

General Motors and du Pont, for example, have just announced new plans for bonus incentives. Both have had substantial incentive plans in effect for some time, General Motors since 1918 and du Pont since 1904, but the new plans have been devised with the help of tax lawyers and specialists in employee compensation problems. They are too complicated to attempt to describe here, but they are combinations of cash payments spread over a number of years, plus stock options, and are so arranged that the employee gets the best possible break in the face of high taxes and possible declines in stock prices.

Such plans are far out of the reach of the Services—last year, for example, the president of General Motors got $69,737 in stock and $425,263 in cash bonus. But the point is that if the most successful businesses in the world find these incentives profitable, how much more applicable such a modest form of incentives as the Cordiner Plan would be to the objectives of National Defense. Furthermore, the Cordiner Plan by reducing costly turnovers (see the story of the Air Defense Command's problems on page 8 of this issue) means more and better defense for less money.

Explorer Aloft. We hope that the Army's success in putting a satellite into orbit will not swing Congress and the nation as far toward over-confidence as the launching of Russia's Sputniks did toward under-confidence.

The success of Jupiter C was heartening to a nation that needed heartening. But its 30.8 pound satellite is still far short of the 184 pound Sputnik I and is dwarfed by the 1,120 pound Sputnik II. The fact is, Explorer is already outdated. The Army could have put it into orbit two years ago if it had not been restrained by the Administration. The Defense forces have better and more sophisticated devices. Dr. Wernher von Braun, the Army's missile expert, said after the launching that the Navy's Vanguard is a more advanced device. But even Vanguard will not be able to put as large a satellite into orbit as the Sputniks. Next in line, and capable of bigger things, is the Air Force's twice successfully test-fired Atlas which eventually will be used to put a satellite into orbit.

Yet the Army's feat has been a needed stimulant. It has shown that we are not way behind Russia. We hope that it will not make Congress and the people believe that we are abreast of Russia in the missile field. Such over confidence could tone down the impetus that has been given to missile development.

The feat also has been a stimulant to the Army—both to its morale and its prestige. The Army has suffered continual cut-backs over recent years. Now it is the recipient of congratulations from both the Air Force and the Navy. Chairman Vinson of the House Armed Services Committee is urging the Secretary of Defense to assign greater responsibilities to the Army (see story on page 32).

Explorer will have performed a needed function if it puts the military missile program in a better perspective; that is, if it demonstrates the high capability of our Armed Services and the industries which serve them without at the same time conveying the impression that we have caught up with the Russians.

France, so today's Army sees the new missile as breaking the barriers which held it to the former 200 mile capability limit.

The Army, which has shown the way with solid propellants with its Sergeant missile, has hopes of designing the new Pershing for a range of 500 miles. Furthermore, Secretary of Defense Neil H. McElroy in his authorization for the Army to proceed with the solid-propellant Pershing also permits the Army to design it for a range within its tactical requirements. Such tactical requirements, the Army feels, extend far beyond the previously imposed 200 mile limit. One may expect, therefore, that the Pershing missile will give new and greater missile capability to the Army.

QUOTES FROM THE JOURNAL

10 Years Ago (7 Feb. 1948)—The murder of Gandhi by a Hindu extremist, the effect of which is still beyond powers to forecast, was followed promptly by wise action in the part of the Nehru government of India. Troops and police were dispatched quickly to block budding riots, and two extremist Hindu societies are being closed down. The Pakistan (Moslem) establishment with like good judgement has sought to calm its own trouble-makers being aware that full-blown riots at this stage could cause uncontrollable disaster to both new nations.

50 Years Ago (8 Feb. 1908)—The whole system of regulating contracts for the purchase of materials for the military Services is cumbersome and vexatious not only to the officers in charge of such transactions but to civilian bidders. Reputable business firms have more than once withdrawn their proposals rather than submit to absurd conditions imposed by the government in preparing contracts.

90 Years Ago (8 Feb. 1868)—The Universal Peace Society has hatched its egg. For years it has been incubating on the great moral question how to quarrel without fighting. At last its protracted brooding has been crowned with success. It has discovered, and has announced in its resolutions, that "peace can best be preserved by giving woman the right to vote."

Army's Pershing Missile. Selection of the name Pershing for the solid propellant version of the Army's Redstone missile is particularly appropriate. Just as General of the Armies John J. Pershing led the Army from a small token force to the magnificent AEF and victory in

Pay For Specialists

Editor, THE JOURNAL:

You report that the Navy will not support special pay for lawyers because it does not wish to back incentives for a special group of officers. This attitude helps explain why the Navy cannot get enough lawyers and why the services cannot attract officers with other special skills, such as engineers and scientists. They have not learned yet that officers with special training require and deserve special pay, promotion, and other personnel policies.

In civilian life men with advanced professional training receive extra pay and privileges; in the service they generally do not. As a result, such men rarely stay in service. This was true of dentists and physicians, so they had to be given special pay. It now appears to be true of lawyers, and they need special pay. Soon it will be recognized that officers with advanced scientific training do not stay in service, for they do much better in civilian life, even working for the government as civil servants. Such men will not stay in service without special incentives. This has been recognized in the case of enlisted men, and proficiency pay has been ordered for those with special skills. The same thing must be done for officers.

The lawyers should be given extra pay. In addition, men holding a master's degree in their field of work should be given the incentive pay now given to veterinarians, and those holding the Ph.D. should be given the same pay as physicians and dentists. Highly trained combat leaders and officers with executive training (e.g. at the Command and General Staff College) also deserve special pay. There is no civilian market for their skills (as there is for the professional groups) so they cannot show their dissatisfaction by leaving, but they also deserve special recognition.

The number of officers with this type of training is not large, but these are the men making the most significant contribution to national defense. It would cost relatively little to pay them enough to keep their services; it costs a great deal more to lose them and retrain others, or, worse yet, have no one at all to do the job. More and more the services must depend on men who have had long and highly specialized training. To get and keep them, we must give them the special rewards they deserve.

CAPTAIN, USA

Lawyers Versed In Law

Editor, THE JOURNAL:

Your 25 January article on the inability of the services to retain lawyers makes several good points, omits a few, and somewhat misstates others. This is, of course, because your source is a service lawyer who chose to remain in the service, not one who elected to get out. A few further points might be made concerning the Army JAG Corps (which perhaps would apply to the other services, too).

1. Most very junior officers do not consider themselves underpaid, although they are naturally a bit griped because of the tremendous financial benefits accorded their medical-dental brethren. What does concern them is the fact that after 15 or 20 years in the Army, they will earn $10,000.00 yearly at the most, while their law school classmates, if competent, will have long since passed that mark.

2. In civilian law generally, a lawyer is rarely overruled. His client be it a corporation or an individual—either substantially follows his advice or gets another lawyer. In the Army the JAG officer is frequently overruled, or ignored, by line commanders. Occasionally insult is even added to injury when the JAG officer is subsequently blamed for the error.

3. Obvious inequities aside, the most successful private practitioners or house counsel is usually he who gets the richest clients and who handles their legal problems most effectively. Much less so in the Army JAG Corps — he who gets to be a colonel first is too often he who wears the most campaign ribbons (exemplary, but of limited value in law) or he who graduated from West Point (an honor, but not America's finest law school). This unfortunate promotion situation is caused primarily by two factors: (a) Non-lawyers often rate or endorse lawyers; (b) The Army JAG Corps is replete with colonels and generals who have been lawyers less than 10 years but who are Pointers.

It is obvious, though it may be hard for many a solid Infantry officer to accept, that the Army needs good lawyers versed in law, and not good officers who do the best they can with the law they know.

AN EMPIRICAL OBSERVER

Messages Laud Army On Satellite

Secretary of Defense Neil H. McElroy and the civilian heads of the Navy and Air Force recognized the launching of the Explorer earth satellite by the Army 31 January at Cape Canaveral, Fla., with messages of congratulation.

Other messages were received from individuals and organizations throughout the world, the Defense Department reported.

At the same time, Army Secretary Wilber M. Brucker expressed "heartiest congratulations" to Maj. Gen. John B. Medaris, head of the Army Ballistic Missile Agency, and to the scientists who developed and launched the first U. S. earth satellite.

Secretary McElroy's statement: "Congratulations to the Army and the scientists who successfully launched the U. S. satellite tonight. This was a joint achievement of American science and industry, backed by the military. The data the satellite will gather will be made available to all nations and will enrich the scientific knowledge of the world."

From Secretary of the Navy Thomas S. Gates came the following telegram for Secretary Brucker:

"My heartiest congratulations to the Army's missile men for today's launching of an International Geophysical Year scientific earth satellite as well as for their concurrent contribution to the art of rocketry."

Secretary of the Air Force James H. Douglas sent this message to Secretary Brucker:

"General White joins me in extending, on behalf of the Air Force, sincerest congratulations for the fine Army achievement of launching the 'Explorer'."

A similar message was sent to General Maxwell D. Taylor, Army Chief of Staff, by General Thomas D. White, Chief of Staff of the Air Force.

Secretary Brucker acknowledged the message of Navy Secretary Gates, stating that "The congratulations of the Navy . . . are a clear expression of the historic bonds of friendship that have always existed between the Military Services of our great National Defense team."

In his congratulations to General Medaris and Dr. Wernher von Braun, head of the scientific team which developed the Explorer, Secretary Brucker said:

"This is an historical scientific achievement, and one from which the United States as well as the entire scientific world will reap benefit. The fruition of your efforts has reflected high honor upon you, the US Army and the Nation."

Among others sending congratulatory messages to the Army and Secretary Brucker were Sen. Stuart Symington (D-Mo.), former Air Force Secretary.

Vanguard Team Offered For Satellite Nucleus

The Navy has volunteered its Vanguard satellite team and facilities to provide the "nucleus" for the proposed Defense Department organization to coordinate and direct the nation's satellite program.

This was revealed to the House Armed Services Committee by Assistant Secretary of the Navy Garrison Norton.

He noted that "The power plants and other hardware and the technological experience developed and gained by all the Services in their various missile efforts, give the nation an impressive potential for satellite and space programs."

Mr. Norton said that in 1958 the Navy estimates 33 per cent of its research and development budget will be spent for missiles. In 1959, this is expected to go up 42.5 per cent.

In missile development itself, however, the Assistant Secretary said he was "convinced of the necessity of some degree of sponsorship of basic research by each individual service in their respective areas of interest, regardless of whatever centralized effort may be established."

He said that the "organization charged with the development of weapons for which an operational requirement is clearly seen must be completely responsive to the user's needs. There can be no substitute for a close identity of interest and experience between the scientists and the men who use the weapons."

Navy Makes Special Appeal For $1 Billion To Speed Polaris Missile-Submarine Plans

The Navy has drafted a special appeal to Secretary of Defense Neil H. McElroy for an additional billion dollars to construct nine atomic submarines to launch the Polaris missile.

Secretary of the Navy Thomas S. Gates made the disclosure in hearings released by the House Armed Services Committee on 5 February.

Six of the submarines will be in addition to the three now being rushed through Congress in the supplemental military appropriations bill.

Secretary Gates told the committee the Navy can live with the manpower cuts and ship reductions which will result from the fiscal '59 budget, but that it can use more money than the $11.1 billion which the President has asked for the Navy in fiscal '59 and the $350 million contained in the supplemental for fiscal '58.

He said he does not believe the combat efficiency of the Navy will be impaired by the present budget request, but added that he has drafted a letter to the Secretary of Defense asking for an additional billion dollars to further accelerate the Polaris program "and build more submarines."

The request, he said, is based on "very recent information based on new tests and new appraisals and contemplations, of course, a fairly big crash effort, of which there is a real element of risk involved."

However, he told the committee, the crash program "could advance the date" of the Polaris system by as much as "ten months" on the first Polaris sub "and maybe more than that on the succeeding ones."

Secretary Gates said, "Navy people believe that we could probably produce the nine submarines in approximately

Navy's Statement On Second Vanguard

The Navy issued the following official statement telling of the ill-fated flight of the second Vanguard test rocket which broke in two 60 seconds after it was launched 5 February at Cape Canaveral, Fla.:

"The Vanguard rocket test vehicle, launched this morning (5 February) at Cape Canaveral, was the second of the full three-stage rocket test vehicles in the Vanguard program. The first 57 seconds of the flight were smooth and all components of the rocket functioned normally.

"Our telemetry records show that between the fifty-seventh and the sixtieth second after take-off, small irregularities occurred in the first stage engine controlled system. After the sixtieth second the failure in the control system caused the engine to deflect far to the right and the resultant abnormally high forces caused the rocket to break in the middle.

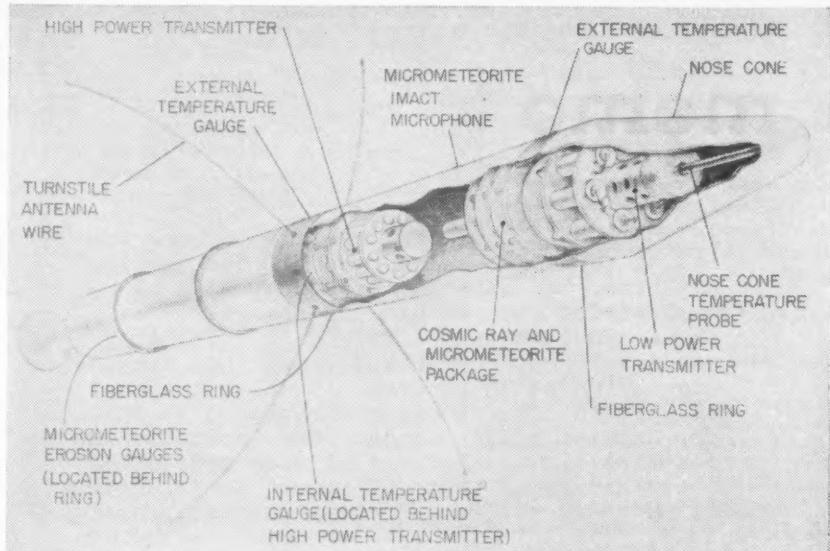

"At this time the rocket was destroyed for safety reasons and fell into the Atlantic. Parts are being recovered for further study and to obtain additional details of the accident."

the same time level that we are now talking about the three."

The supplemental appropriations measure which has passed both houses of Congress and is now pending conference action, provides $350 million for the Polaris program, including about $296 million for the first three submarines.

EXPLORER, the Earth Satellite put into orbit 31 Jan. by the US Army, is 80 inches long and weighs 30.80 pounds. The instrument-carrying section (forward) and the final-stage rocket (rear) orbit as a single unit. Fanning out from the mid section is the antenna, made up of whip-like rods with weighed balls on the ends of rods. The rotational spin of the satellite forces the antenna out from the body. Both the high-power transmitter (radiating 60 milliwatts of radio frequency power) and the low-power transmitter (radiating between 10 and 20 milliwatts of power) transmit information continuously on eight channels.

These Are The Names In Explorer Shot

The top-flight missile team under Maj. Gen. John B. Medaris, USA, Commander of the Army Ballistic Missile Agency, Huntsville, Ala., attributes its satellite success to a host of dedicated personnel, ranging from civilians and Army privates to the two-star general at the top.

The Agency's second-in-command is Brig. Gen. John A. Barclay, ABMA Deputy Commanding General.

Prominent among those who contributed to the first American satellite success are two former enlisted men who participated in early development work at the agency. Pfc. Charles A. Lundquist, a Ph.D. and top flight mathematician, began his work on satellite capabilities when he was assigned to the agency in 1954. During his tour at Redstone he calculated orbital and tracking problems for the satellite and laid the groundwork for the project's 704 computer.

Robert E. Moser, test coordinator for all Army missile and rocket launches at Cape Canaveral, Fla., began his association with the Ballistic Missile Agency in 1953, when he was assigned to Redstone Arsenal. He advanced to the rank of corporal before his discharge in 1955.

After his separation from the Service, Mr. Moser took a Civil Service appointment and continued in his Army job in a civilian capacity. He now is responsible for coordinating all aspects of the test launches at Cape Canaveral and functions as Deputy Chief of the Guidance and Control Group in the Missile Firing Laboratory, under the supervision of Dr. Wernher von Braun.

Head of the Army team at Cape Canaveral is Col. Leonard Orman, Director of Army Tests. The Central Control group at the Cape is led by Capt. Ballard Small.

Leading the list of top civilian scientists working on the satellite project is Dr. von Braun, ABMA Chief of Development Operations. Dr. Kurt Debus is Test Director on the Jupiter-C, which put the satellite into orbit.

Dr. Walter Haeussermann is Director of the ABMA Guidance and Control Laboratory which worked on the satellite's guidance mechanism.

One of the most crucial jobs in the satellite launching operation was held by Dr. Ernst Stuhlinger, whose task was to push the all-important second-stage button. Dr. Stuhlinger and his assistants had only about 200 seconds to assemble their data and determine the best moment for launching the missile's second stage.

Special contributions to the Explorer project came from a number of noted civilian scientists and space experts.

SECY. BRUCKER HAILS THE EXPLORER SUCCESS

"With the launching of the Army's JUPITER-C Satellite, the United States has demonstrated its emergence into a new scientific and technological era. The entire free world has been anxiously looking to us for this accomplishment; for our hopes and success are theirs to share as they share our common quest for peace and solidarity among freedom-loving nations.

"I speak for the entire U. S. Army when I say that we are extremely proud to have had the opportunity to make another historical contribution to the scientific progress of our country, and to the world, during this first International Geophysical Year.

"I extend my profound appreciation to Maj. Gen. John B. Medaris and Dr. Wernher von Braun of the Army Ballistic Missile Agency, Huntsville, Alabama, and Dr. William H. Pickering, Director of the Jet Propulsion Laboratory, operated for the Army by the California Institute of Technology, as well as to the hundreds of military and civilian scientific personnel who have contributed so much to this achievement. They have exemplified the highest degree of dedication and well directed team work."

Dr. Jack E. Froehlich is project Director of the Jet Propulsion Laboratory, North Pasadena, Calif., which contributed the third and fourth stage "package" which converted the missile into a satellite launching rocket. Dr. William H. Pickering is JPL Director. Another member of the JPL who participated in the launching is Dr. Homer Joe Stewart.

The main part of the experimental "package" was designed by Dr. James A. Van Allen of Iowa State University.

Maj. Gen. D. N. Yates, USAF, Commander of the Air Force Missile Test Center, Cape Canaveral, Fla., heads the group of Air Force personnel who contributed to the satellite launching.

Maj. Robert F. Durbin and Lt. John L. Meisenheimer, of the Air Force weather detachment, Patrick AFB, Fla., provided the weather information for the launching. Maj. Robert L. Miller also participated in the weather briefings.

memo :

IF THE PENTAGON PROCEEDS with plans to seek legislation for major changes in officer career patterns, the Defense Department will be well advised to explain the changes to the field quickly and carefully. The Army and Air Force, for example, are just completing augmentation programs in which thousands of Reserve officers were encouraged to compete for Regular appointments. One incentive was the implicit assurance that such appointments would assure at least 28 years' service, provided there was satisfactory performance of duty.

THERE WILL BE FEARS that authorization for 20-year selection for retention, in the event of new RIF action, could mean that all officers with 20 years or more service would be the first target for cuts—before Reservists with less than that amount of service.

SOME MILITARY PEOPLE ARE CONCERNED that introduction of legislation to amend the Officer Personnel Act at this time could confuse Congressional consideration of the military pay bill. Critics of the proposed OPA changes point out that on the one hand the pay bill emphasized the need to raise incentive for full career service, while the suggested OPA changes present the possibility of early retirement for officers. There is much to be said on both sides of this issue, but unless the Defense Department takes special action to explain its decision, morale in officer ranks could suffer.

THE AIR FORCE WILL INTENSIFY its public statements concerning its first place in space. That effort was begun in earnest with the National Press Club address in November of General White in which the Chief of Staff spoke of the missile as a transition weapon to manned space flight. The theme was restated this week in the Harmon Awards address of Lt. Gen. Donald L. Putt, Deputy CofS for Development. Speaking for General White, who was called to the Capitol, he stressed that the North American X-15 rocket plane is only "a step away from a manned satellite."

WHILE GIVING MAXIMUM PRIORITY to its missile programs, the Air Force, looking further to the future, will put a firm foot forward in claiming exclusive responsibility for manned space flight.

DR. JAMES R. KILLIAN, Special Scientific Assistant to President Eisenhower, will have a Marine Corps officer as his Assistant. Lt. Robert N. Kreidler, USMCR, who was on duty as Chief Advanced Base Problem Section, Marine Corps Educational Center, Quantico, Va., has reverted to inactive duty to take the new post.

THE PENTAGON PRESS will miss DoD Director of Information C. Herschel Schooley. A crack military PubInfo expert—he has been with the Defense Department since its activation—Naval Reserve Commander Schooley moves to the Department of Interior to be top public information assistant to Secretary Fred Seaton, formerly Assistant SecDef for Legislative and Public Affairs. Mr. Schooley's departure means the loss to Pentagon reporters of a skilled official whose wealth of background information will not be replaced easily.

MARINE PVT. MATTHEW J. McKEON, who was reduced from staff sergeant to his present rank after a tragedy in which he led a platoon of recruits at Parris Island, S.C., into a swamp where six drowned on the night of 8 April 1956, is winning a personal fight and is vindicating the encouragement of former Navy Secretary Charles S. Thomas. In reducing the court-martial sentence, which included a Bad Conduct Discharge, Mr. Thomas said, "I recognize that the road back will be a hard one. . . . I am giving him his chance." At Cherry Point, N.C., where he is now stationed, Pfc McKeon has been named "Marine of the Month" in All-Weather Fighter Squadron 14. Selection is made on the basis of personal appearance, ambition, performance of duties, leadership and conduct.

COFFEE CONSUMPTION in the Armed Forces is no drop in the pot. The Army-Air Force Exchange Service (see Page 31) last year sold 220,000,000 cups. This does not include, of course, coffee served at military mess halls. The PX's also turned over 55,000,000 hamburgers.

AIR FORCE MANPOWER PROBLEMS (see the report from ADC, Page 8) are not scheduled for formal discussion at the AFA meeting. It can be expected, however, that Secretary Douglas will stress the need for increased retention rates in his banquet address 27 February, and that General White will follow this up with his report on "The Space Mission" the next day. There had been some hope that President Ralph J. Cordiner of the General Electric Company would speak, but his name is not listed as a participant.

THE AFA CONFERENCE will come at a time when Congress should be in high gear on the military pay bill. That's why it is particularly important that this forum not be lost for discussion of critical manpower deficiencies in all the Services.

THE PENTAGON WILL BE WISE in forthcoming pay hearings to avoid undocumented generalizations in describing the impact of skilled manpower losses on combat effectiveness. Members of Congress rightfully will demand specific examples. The Defense Department, it is to be hoped, will order the individual Services to bring in some combat commanders to give authoritative briefings on this problem.

THE AIR DEFENSE COMMAND, if given the opportunity, is prepared to advise Congress of tests, conducted against SAC formations, which have dramatically demonstrated that a skilled early aircraft warning team can detect "enemy" forces at distances from one-third to one-half greater than is possible by average crews where turnover is great. The ADC commanders, in off-the-record statements, can present these detection differentials in terms of specific miles. That's the kind of presentation that will ring the bell on Capitol Hill.

PENTAGON CENSORS ARE DELETING most references to numbers in the closed-door testimony of Defense officials before the House and Senate Armed Services Committees. This procedure was followed with regard to statements by CNO Burke on the number of Polaris missiles that will be carried by submarines. However, the transcript shows the following question by a Senate Preparedness Subcommittee counsel: "What will be the reliability of the 16 missiles delivered to the first submarine which will become operational?"

Army Slashes ROTC Tours To 6 Months

The Army has adopted a new policy concerning the ordering to active duty of ROTC graduates with majors in certain scientific subjects.

ROTC students concerned who are not needed to fill branch quotas will now be ordered to only six months active duty for training unless they prefer a two year tour.

It was emphasized, however, that a limited number of science major graduates will be called for two years active duty. Formerly these ROTC graduates did not receive preferential treatment in exclusion from selection for two years active duty.

The policy change applies to those students commissioned between 1 May this year and 30 April, 1959. Those affected are students majoring in chemistry, geology, geophysics, mathematics, microbiology, parasitology, pharmacology, physics, physiology and engineering.

The change in policy was made because the specialists are critically needed in the civilian economy, the Pentagon said.

Purdue Tells Plans For Retired Course

Recent events have accentuated the necessity of overcoming the current shortage of qualified teachers, particularly in the fields of science and mathematics. Retired service personnel can help relieve this shortage by preparing for an interesting and challenging career in teaching, while supplementing their retirement income.

The Department of Mathematics and Statistics at Purdue University offers such a program. Currently they are recruiting the third group to start in this special program. Members of the first class, who completed the program in August, 1957, all are teaching in colleges in the general geographic area of their choice. The range of salaries is from $4,200 to $5,300 for an academic year of nine to ten months.

The objective of this special program is to prepare retired Armed Service personnel who have a bachelor's degree and have studied calculus to teach the basic courses in collegiate mathematics. Those completing the program and fulfilling the Graduate School requirements receive a Master of Science degree.

The program includes an eight week review session which starts on 21 July 1958 for the next group, plus two semesters and a summer session of advanced work. Candidates starting this July will be ready to accept teaching positions in the fall of 1959.

Additional information may be obtained by writing Dr. M. Wiles Keller, Director, Retired Armed Service Training Program, Department of Mathematics and Statistics, Purdue University, Lafayette, Indiana.

Army Plans Direct Soldier O'Sea Shifts

Soldiers serving two years of active duty who are required to fill overseas quotas, henceforth will be assigned directly from their training activity.

Previously, enlisted men serving on two years active duty were frequently assigned to units in the United States after completing advanced individual training and then, after a short period of leave, were ordered overseas. This involved excessive movement of personnel and shorter overseas service, and consequently less profitable utilization in both areas.

The change will mean a longer period of overseas service and less movement of personnel.

It will also eliminate from overseas levies those enlisted personnel on active duty for 24 months who are permanently assigned to units or activities within the United States, except where service requirement dictates to the contrary.

U. S. Chamber Of Commerce Urges Broadened Authority For SecDef

Broadening of the authority of the Secretary of Defense with the appropriation of Defense funds directly to him where possible, rather than on a service-by-service basis, and adoption of a pay and promotion system based primarily on merit were among a list of major Defense Department changes proposed 4 February by the Chamber of Commerce of the United States following their adoption by the organization's board of directors.

The Chamber called for adoption of six changes in the National Security Act while recommending that the defense reorganization include the assignment of military personnel "primarily to tactical posts, leaving an increasing load of the administrative and technical duties to civilians."

The proposals were drawn up by the Chamber's National Defense Committee, headed by Glenwood J. Sherrard, President of the G. J. Sherrard Company of Boston.

Reorganization is needed, the Chamber said, because "many of the new weapons cannot even be classified, much less forced into the obsolete roles and missions concepts set forth in the (National Security) Act and this has been the principal cause of the bitter inter-service rivalry for the development and employment of missiles."

The Chamber called for revision of the Act to:

1. Insure that the Secretary of Defense is the real, rather than the nominal, head of the Department, with full authority for planning and managing the department's affairs.

2. Permit the Secretary greater flexibility to make whatever adjustments are needed to meet any new threat to the national security.

3. Clarify the planning and policy making functions of the Secretary to determine the extent to which, if any, he should engage in operations.

4. Establish a new concept of the traditional roles and missions of the three services to make possible the most efficient use of space-age weapons.

5. Provide, wherever possible, for appropriation of defense funds directly to the Secretary and on a functional rather than service-by-service basis.

6. Unify strategic planning and remove it from partial service interests.

PROMISES "BEST FIGHT" FOR BIGGER ARMY

Chairman Carl Vinson (D-Ga) of the House Armed Services Committee announced in testimony released on 4 February that he will wage a fight to restore Army strength to 925,000.

This would be an increase of 55,000 officers and men above the presently approved end strength of 870,000 for fiscal '59.

Chairman Vinson said he also will personally "appear before the Appropriations Committee" to make a special appeal for the Army because he is worried about "the failure of the Army to receive sufficient money to carry out its missions."

He told Secretary of the Army Wilber M. Brucker that he believes the Armed Services Committee will be justified in "making a most determined effort to see that your appropriations are more in line with that of your requests."

He said "I think that is one of the great troubles in the Army today, if there are any troubles, and that is the lack of money; and Congress has not, in my judgment, appropriated sufficient money to meet your military commitments."

Chairman Vinson said "I am going to make the best fight I know how" to see that Army strength is restored "to the strength that the military men feel it is warranted to secure the defense of this country."

The ranking minority member of the Committee, Representative Leslie J. Arends (R-Ill) agreed that the Congress should move quickly to provide the necessary funds.

ROA Makes Posthumous Award To Chaplain Bol

Chaplain LCdr. Peter Bol was to posthumously receive the Navy Chaplain of the Year Award of the Reserve Officers Association of the U. S., at a ceremony at the Mayflower Hotel, Washington, D. C., 8 February.

Navy Chief of Chaplains, RAdm. Edward B. Harp, Jr., receives the citation on Chaplain Bol's behalf.

Chaplain Bol was killed in the crash of a MATS plane on 2 February, en route to receive the award. The crash occurred at Norwalk, Calif., near Los Angeles.

The citation is to be forwarded to Chaplain Bol's widow, Juliette Frances E. Bol, 1416 West Cedar Street, Oxnard, Calif.

The ROA makes an award to a Chaplain from each of the Services annually. The award signifies that the individual has expressed through his activities and duty performance the spirit of the famous four chaplains who sacrificed their lives on the SS Dorchester during WWII.

Secretary and Mrs. McElroy will be entertained at dinner again on Thursday, 20 February when their hosts will be the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff and Mrs. Nathan F. Twining, who will give their dinner party at the Officers' Club, Bolling Air Force Base. General and Mrs. Twining have had with them their daughter, Mrs. Haywood Hansell, 3rd, and infant son, Stephen, while Lt. Hansell is on duty in Newfoundland. The ladies and baby left this week for a brief holiday in the Bahamas.

Service Sons Honored—

Gary Legner, 13, Charles Brazie, 14, and Bill Oprendek, 13, have received Eagle Awards, symbol of Boy Scouting's highest rank at special Court of Honor ceremonies 30 January in St. James Auditorium, Falls Church, Va.

Gary is the son of Maj. and Mrs. Hal. J. Legner, 411 Rosemary Lane, Falls Church. Major Legner is assigned to the Office of the Army Chief Signal Officer. Chuck is the son of Maj (USAF) and Mrs. Charles Brazie, 701 Poplar Dr., Falls Church. Bill is the son of Mr. and Mrs. William Oprendek, 1520 Deborah Drive.

The ceremony was a rare event as Troop 681 established a record in the State of Virginia by awarding the Eagle Rank to three Scouts on the same date, all members of the same Scout Patrol.

Major Legner is Patrol Dad for these boys and eight others. He also serves on the Troop Advancement Committee, Troop Council, and is a Counselor in Scouting and the Merit Badge Program.

JANGO To Honor Mrs. McElroy & Mrs. Quarles—

The next luncheon of the Junior Army Navy Guild Organization will be held 18 February at the Ft. Myer, Va. Officers' Club at 12:15 p.m., when Mrs. Neil H. McElroy, wife of the Secretary of Defense, and Mrs. Donald A. Quarles, wife of the Deputy Secretary of Defense, will be the honor guests.

ICAF Women's Club To Lunch—

An old fashioned Valentine will be the motif in the main ballroom of the Ft. McNair Officers' Club, when the monthly luncheon of the Women's Club of the Industrial College of the Armed Forces meets on Tuesday, 11 February. The social hour will begin at 12:00 noon and lunch will be served at 12:45 p.m.

Dr. Carroll Quigley, professor of History at the School of Foreign Service of Georgetown University, will be the guest speaker, on the timely subject "Technology and American Education."

Hostess Association Luncheon—

The Armed Forces Hostess Association is accepting reservations for its ninth birthday anniversary luncheon, to be held Thursday, 20 February, at the Officers' Club, Ft. McNair. Wives of all U. S. military officers newly assigned to the Washington area are invited to the affair, which will honor the AFHA's founder, Mrs. F. P. Campbell.

Preceded by a social hour at noon, luncheon will be served at 12:45 p.m., and will be followed by a showing of Spring fashions from one of Washington's well known stores, "The Jumping Jacks" from the U. S. Air Force Band, will provide background music.

Reservations may be made through Monday, 17 February, by mailing a check for $2.50 to Mrs. P. L. Doerr, 4608 Overbrook Rd., Washington 16, D. C. or by phoning her at OLiver 6-1738.

Assisting Mrs. T. N. Stratton, the luncheon chairman, are Mesdames R. E. Kuntz, invitations; C. G. Fairchild and Trevor Dupuy, program; John A. Peters, publicity; and Doerr, reservations.

A volunteer organization composed of wives of officers from all branches of the Service, the Armed Forces Hostess Association fulfills two major functions, a welcome to newly-arrived officers' wives to the Washington area through a network of neighborhood hostesses, and a central information service, providing data about military installations throughout the world for Service personnel of all ranks stationed both in the U. S. and abroad. Because of the heavy military turnover in the Washington area, new members are constantly needed to continue the work of the AFHA and wives of all officers currently stationed here are urged to join.

TC Women's Club Style Show—

Winter-weary members of the Transportation Corps Women's Club can look forward to a bit of Spring on 26 February. The highlight of the luncheon meeting, which will be held at the Ft. McNair Officers' Club, will be a prelude of Spring fashions presented by one of Washington's leading stores.

Rep. Utt Rebuffs Appeal of Wives Barred From Far East; Quotes Gen. Pate's Version

A group of Marine Corps wives living in California have hit a dead end in attempts to bring about changes in regulations prohibiting them from joining their husbands in the Far East.

Two of these wives, who complained to Representative James B. Utt (R-Calif.) were described by the Congressman as "not representative of one per cent of the Marine Corps." He said that he, nevertheless, forwarded their complaints to General Randolph McC. Pate, Commandant of the Marine Corps.

After receiving General Pate's reply, Mr. Utt wrote these two women: "You have alleged that the policy of the Marine Corps is directed at the punishment of senior officers who encouraged residence of their dependents in the Far East.

"Any Marine officer who disregards the policies of the Marine Corps," he said, "does not exhibit a high standard of conduct, and at least suffers a loss of professional reputation. If it were otherwise, our combat units would soon cease to exist as effective fighting organizations."

"There is no doubt," the Congressman said, "that the Marine wives who remained in Japan were within their constitutional rights. But they must also recognize that in doing so they were jeopardizing the careers of their husbands."

None "Kicked Out"

Both Congressman Utt and General Pate said that "There are no Marines being 'kicked out' of the Marine Corps because of the actions of members of their families."

The El Toro wives further complained to Congressman Utt that General Pate, who took his wife with him on a visit to the Far East, had issued the "go home" order for other Marine wives in Japan.

Representative Utt's answer to this was: "The fact that Mrs. Pate was traveling with the General while inspecting Marine Corps facilities throughout the Far East and that they were entertained by officers who were not allowed to have their wives with them, is clearly explainable in that to have permitted them to attend these affairs would have been to condone the presence of these wives in Japan in violation of the directive approved by the Secretary of the Navy which does not authorize the presence of dependents of the Fleet Marine Force in the Far East."

Disillusioned Officers

The women had also charged that the presence of Marine wives in the Far East had prejudiced evaluations on their husband's fitness reports and had hurt their chances for promotion.

Congressman Utt contended that those officers passed over for promotion "apparently did not come up to the standard required for such promotion."

"Quite naturally, those who are passed over become somewhat disillusioned and cease to be of as great value to the Corps as they were before. It is reasonable to presume that an officer who disregards eral of the Military District of Washington, the dedication was delivered by Gen. Willard G. Wyman, Commanding General of the U. S. Continental Army Command. The plaque was accepted on behalf of Ft. Myer by the installation's Commanding Officer, Colonel William H. Spicer. General Joyce was present with Mrs. Joyce at the ceremonies.

Also attending were Gen. (USA-Ret) and Mrs. Lucian K. Truscott, Jr., Gen. (USA-Ret) and Mrs. Jacob L. Devers, Maj. Gen. (USA-Ret) and Mrs. Frank A. Allen, Jr., Col. (USA-Ret) and Mrs. John Nash, Col. John B. Reybold and Miss Marian Reybold, and Mrs. Jo Wyman.

Sen. Jenner Opposes Wives At Overseas Bases

Senator William E. Jenner (R-Ind) has asked "Why are vast numbers of military dependents living on bases all over the world?"

"I can see no excuse," he said, "for burdening men on the Communist frontier with the dread possibility their wives and children will go down with them, if they are enveloped by a sudden Red attack."

"If we need fighting men to defend America," said the Senator, "we want no softening of the brutal necessity. We want our fighting forces to be the fightingest thing on this planet, and even in outer space."

He made those remarks to the Women's Patriotic Conference on National Defense at Washington, D. C., 30 January.

or permits his family to disregard an order or policy of the Corps, prejudices his own promotion."

"Happy To Report"

General Pate, in his letter to the Congressman, rejected charges of widespread immorality and disease among Far East Marines.

The General said: "I am happy to report that in my recent visit I found the facts to be to the contrary. The commanders concerned informed me that the VD rate was low and is steadily decreasing."

The Policy Is Explained

Marine Corps policy is not permitting dependents to accompany members of the Fleet Marine Force to the Far East was explained in General Pate's letter.

"Marines assigned to those combat units of the Fleet Marine Force which are stationed in the Far East are not authorized to take their dependents overseas for several reasons," the General said.

"These units, like most other military forces in that area, are there primarily for emergency expeditionary purposes. While they contribute to local defense, their principal role is to provide mobile forces in readiness for employment on a moment's notice anywhere in the Western Pacific."

"We are proud, for example, that not long ago a force of 1500 Marines was able to embark and sail for the Near East on a moment's notice without prior warning. This mobility does not go unnoticed by our potential enemies."

"But in consideration of all these factors," General Pate said, "which make it necessary to separate a comparatively small percentage of Marines from their families while they are assigned to units in the Far East, the tour of duty has been reduced to 14 months instead of the two years which is normal in that area. This benefits not only the married personnel but also the far greater number—the unmarried."

Obituary

Col. Frank A. Derouin, USA-Ret

Funeral services were held 24 January at the Ft. Myer, Va., Chapel for Col. Frank A. Derouin, USA-Ret., who died at Walter Reed Army Hospital 22 January, at the age of 73. Burial was at Arlington National Cemetery.

A native of Massachusetts, Colonel Derouin attended Amherst College and L'Ecole Libre des Sciences in France. He was commissioned in 1917, later receiving his Regular Army commission. A graduate of the Infantry School and of the British Army Middle East High Commanders Course, during WWII, Colonel Derouin served as Military Attaché to Syria. His last assignment, before retirement from active duty in 1944, was as Assistant Inspector General of the First Service Command in Boston.

RAdm. Wilhelm Lee Friedell, USN-Ret.

RAdm. Wilhelm Lee Friedell, USN-Ret., died at the U. S. Naval Hospital, San Diego, Calif., 27 January, at the age of 75.

A native of Arkansas, Admiral Friedell was graduated from the U. S. Naval Academy in 1905, a classmate of Fleet Admiral Chester W. Nimitz. Serving aboard the battleship Kentucky during its round-the-world cruise with the Great White Fleet in 1907-08, he was transferred to the cruiser Helena at Manila and thereafter, saw service with the South China Patrol based at Hong Kong and later, in the Yangtze Valley Patrol with headquarters in Shanghai. In 1914, Admiral Friedell took command of Division One of the Submarine Flotilla in the Canal Zone, which subsequently joined the Allied Naval Forces in European waters during WWI. In 1938, Admiral Friedell was named Commander of the Mine Craft Battle Fleet and a year later assumed command of the Pacific Fleet Submarine Force. Much of the success of the U. S. submarine operations in the Pacific following Pearl Harbor has been credited to Admiral Friedell's planning. In 1941, he was appointed Commandant of the Mare Island Navy Yard, where he was in charge of vast shipbuilding operations through most of WWII. Admiral Friedell became Commandant of the 11th Naval District in 1944, in which capacity he served until his retirement from active duty in 1946.

He is survived by his widow, Mrs. Lulu Friedell of 800 B Ave., Coronado, Calif.; one daughter, Mrs. Vincent L Denunzio of Coronado; and one grandchild.

Will Cordiner Recommendations Prevail? "Pay For Merit" Seen Facing Rocky Road

From first page—

won the consent of Chairman Vinson to open the pay hearings even though the full-dress priority inquiry into such matters as roles and missions, defense organization, etc., is still under way.

At the Pentagon, Secretary of Defense Neil H. McElroy is preparing an emphatic presentation for the start of the Kilday Subcommittee hearings to urge enactment of the pay raise legislation effective 1 July 1958.

The bill provides a minimum of 6 per cent increase for everyone on active duty with at least two years' service, and considerably more for about 27 per cent of military personnel who would benefit by the Cordiner pay scales.

Secretary McElroy reportedly will give particular emphasis to the need for enactment of a "modern system" of military compensation—a point that was stressed previously by President Eisenhower.

The basic modification that the Cordiner Committee proposed, and which the Administration supports, is a changeover from the longevity system to a step-in-grade approach.

The new system obviously would provide relatively greater rewards for enlisted men and officers who, because of their meritorious performance of duties, are promoted at an accelerated pace.

President Ralph J. Cordiner of the General Electric Company has said that the step-in-grade concept is essential to stimulate career service among outstanding young men.

On the other hand, some critics of this approach say that persons with long years of total service should be rewarded the most, without direct regard to time in grade.

Representative Kilday, widely recognized as a foremost Congressional authority on military pay, has yet to make any specific comments on the pending pay bill.

He told THE JOURNAL this week that he is reserving judgment until he has had further time to study the legislation and to hear the presentations of Defense leaders.

It remains to be seen whether the Pentagon will rely exclusively on the testimony of

New Member Joins

Armed Services GP

Representative Frank J. Becker (R-NY) has been named to membership on the House Armed Services Committee.

He fills a vacancy created by the recent resignation of Representative Sterling W. Cole (R-NY). Cole resigned to become Director General of the International Atomic Energy Agency.

Congressman Becker, 58, served in the Army in France and England during World War I, and has been active in the American Legion and Veterans of Foreign Wars. As a member of the New York State Legislature, he served as Chairman of a Joint Legislative Committee to Study the Military Law. This Committee completely rewrote the laws governing the Army and Air Force National Guard and the Naval Militia in the State of New York.

Congressman Becker and Mrs. Becker, the former Anne Claire Ferris, have three children: Francis, an attorney who served with the U. S. Air Force during WWII; a daughter, Betty Ann; and a son, Robert who also has served in the Army.

The new House Armed Services Committee member represents the 3d District of New York, which embraces Mitchel AFB. He has served in the U. S. House of Representatives since 1953.

New MacArthur Commander

mony of officials in Washington, D. C., or whether a decision will be made to bring some combat commanders from the field to buttress the presentations.

The ability of the Services to state the case for a new pay system will depend to a large extent on how much time is provided by the Kilday Subcommittee for the open hearings.

The chances for approval of the Cordiner proposals will be jeopardized should the press of business force House and Senate Committees to hold only limited hearings before going into executive session.

Obviously, when a Congressional group goes behind closed doors, Defense officials have no opportunity to present arguments against any basic changes in the legislation.

That is why Secretary McElroy and his associates are hopeful that the Services will be given an opportunity to present their case in full.

On the basis of past House action on military pay legislation, it can be expected that Mr. Kilday will do everything possible to secure sufficient time for full discussion of the pay legislation in open session.

There is no doubt that in addition to Defense Department officials, a strong presentation will be made by the Retired Officers Association to contest the Administration's decision to eliminate any retired pay benefits from the legislation.

It is known that Secretary McElroy advocated that retired personnel be given the minimum of 6 per cent cost-of-living adjustment, but this was turned down by the Bureau of the Budget. The cost for this provision is $41,000,000.

The chances appear at least 50-50 that either in the House or Senate, the bill will be amended to include retired persons.

As to the longevity vs. step-in-grade viewpoints, it would appear reasonable to forecast an eventual compromise, possibly by providing more step-in-grade increases for a number of ranks.

Should the House change drastically the step-in-grade concept, there is a certainty that a number of Senators, among them Stuart Symington (D-Mo) and Barry Goldwater (R-Ariz) will rally to the support of the Cordiner proposals.

Navy Will Close Pensacola Air Field

Corry Field, a part of the Navy's complex of air fields at the Pensacola, Fla., Basic Air Training Command, will be shut down about 15 July.

The Navy said the closing results from a one-third reduction in the pilot training rate, coupled with the planned transition to jet planes in the basic training program.

The disestablishment will save the Navy $1 million annually. The funds will be used at other aviation shore establishments.

More than 1,400 officers and men—supporting about 450 officer student pilots and cadets—will be shifted to other stations. In addition, 160 civilian employees will be relocated.

Minor changes to the volume will be published periodically in the "Newsletter for Retired Marines."

Retired Officers From All The Services Hold Top Offices In Mutual Funds Unit

Sparked by the prominent participation of high-ranking retired military officers in all the Services, a new mutual fund organization is expanding at a rapid pace.

It began in 1956 with the establishment of the American Investment and Income Fund, Inc.

The parent unit in the expanding organization, Washington Underwriters, Inc., with headquarters in the Warner Building in the Nation's Capital, has Mr. Bill Allen as President, and Maj. Gen. Charles W. Lawrence, USAF-Ret., as Vice-President.

Following the establishment of Washington Underwriters, Inc., a decision was made to organize dealer firms in areas where the firm could better achieve its primary objective of providing mutual funds sales to members of the Armed Forces and government employees.

The first satellite company was organized in New York City. Called the Washington Planning Corporation of New York at 52 Broadway, its Chairman is

Conference Kills Advanced Research Projects Agency; Authorizes "Office"

House and Senate conferees have denied the Secretary of Defense authority to set up an Advanced Research Projects Agency within the Pentagon.

They have agreed, however, to give the Secretary full authority to establish some sort of office to carry out such work on projects which are strictly military.

And, they also have given the Secretary the green light, for a period of one year, to engage in any advanced space projects the President may designate.

The action came as the House and Senate Armed Services Committees met to iron out differences in a supplemental authorization bill for new military construction.

The House Committee had written in a special section authorizing the Secretary to establish ARPA. The move came after Committee members questioned the Secretary's authority to take such action without the consent of Congress.

Defense Department General Counsel Robert Decherd maintained that such authority already is inherent in the Secretary's vast powers. The Committees disagreed and drafted language granting specific authority.

Senate Balks

The Senate Armed Services Committee refused to follow the House lead, although it also was of the opinion that the Secretary did not have authority to establish the Agency. The resulting compromise, drafted in conference by members of the two Committees, removes authority for the Agency and provides new language which:

Authorizes the Secretary of Defense to engage in such advanced projects essential to the Defense Department's responsibilities in the field of basic and applied research and development pertaining to weapons systems and military requirements as he determines necessary after consultation with the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

In place of an Agency, the language authorizes the Secretary to utilize some of the Defense Department's present employees and consultants to handle the advanced projects research. Authority also is granted to the Secretary to contract necessary work out to private firms, educational or research institutions and to other agencies of the Government.

OK Space Projects

In addition, the compromise also provides a new section which gives the Secretary authority, for a one-year period, to engage in any advanced space projects which are designated by the President.

Committee spokesmen told THR Journal that this action was necessary to prevent delays in such essentially scientific programs as Project Vanguard, which already are underway. It also will provide interim authority for space research until such time as the President completes his plans for a new space agency.

The President has said he plans to submit a new program to Congress for the establishment of a National Space Authority with broad powers over satellite and rocket craft development. He said he has not decided whether the agency should be placed under the military or civilian control.

Plans for the Advanced Research Projects Agency were outlined before the Senate Appropriations Committee by Secretary of Defense Neil H. McElroy during testimony on the $1.26 million supplemental military appropriations bill which has now been approved by both the House and Senate but has not cleared conference.

Details On ARPA

Here is what Secretary McElroy told the Senators about ARPA:

The supplemental request includes $10,000,000 for the Advanced Research Projects Agency, to be derived by transfer from such annual appropriations available to the Department as may be designated by the Secretary of Defense. We are also requesting authority for the Secretary of Defense to transfer to the

WORLD'S FIRST VEHICLE SHIP JOINS MSTS

A new type of ship joined the Navy 27 January as the 499-foot USNS Comet was loaded in preparation for her maiden voyage to St. Nazaire, France.

The 18-knot Comet, operated by the Military Sea Transportation Service will sail from Philadelphia with a cargo of 378 vehicles onboard. This prototype roll-on roll-off ship embodies many unusual features which enable vehicles ranging in size from a jeep to a semi-truck and trailer, to be driven in and out of the ship under their own power.

To accomplish this method of loading and unloading, the ship is equipped with four side ramps which are lowered to dock level and a stern ramp which can be lowered much like the bow of a landing craft, for vehicle loading from a barge or pier depending on the facilities available.

Cessna Gets $4,500,000 For Air Force L-27's

The Air Force has announced award of a contract for more than $4,500,000 to Cessna Aircraft company for additional L-27 airplanes.

The five place L-27 is classed in "light twin" category, having two engines, fully retractable landing gear, and a cruising speed of over 210 miles per hour. The low wing, all metal plane is the military version of the Cessna 310.

The Air Force uses the L-27 in eight major commands.

This is the second such contract awarded to Cessna after final deliveries under the first contract were made last month. Deliveries under the new contract will begin in May, 1958.

Air Force officials said the purchase of the L-27's as an "off the shelf" item pointed out the advantages of buying an administrative type airplane already developed for the commercial market. Substantial savings are being realized in the operation and maintenance of the L-27 because it is more economical to maintain than the large converted WW II aircraft the USAF had been operating.

Astronautical Society Elects Officers

Libby, Brooklyn Polytechnic Institute, Administrative Vice-President; George Nestor, ACF Industries, Paramus, N. J., Treasurer; Leroy S. McMorris, Merritt-Chapman & Scott, New York, Recording Secretary; Alphonse P. Mayernik, Plainedge Public Schools, New York, Corresponding Secretary.

Directors at Large elected were: Edward H. Heinemann, Douglas Aircraft Co., El Segundo, Calif.; Dr. Jobe Jenkins, Lockheed Aircraft Corp., Palo Alto, Calif.; Allan B. Agency during Fiscal Year 1958 unexpected balances in other appropriations which were previously made available for programs that will now be administered by this new Agency.

The sums proposed for transfer are to be merged with this appropriation and are to be made available for the same purposes and time period.

Will Use Service Resources

In addition, authority is being requested for the Secretary of Defense to transfer funds from this appropriation to those appropriations under the Department of Defense which are being utilized for related programs. This authority to transfer, under the language worked out by the House Appropriations Committee, will facilitate utilization by the Agency of the great facilities and skills which exist in the military departments.

Initially the new Agency will be given full responsibility for research and development of the anti-missile missile and for outer space projects. Other special projects of this kind which are not clearly the responsibility of a single military department or which may be more appropriately performed by this Agency may also be assigned to the Agency.

ARPA's Limits Defined

The Agency will not ordinarily take over research and development of weapons systems which fall clearly within the mission of any one of the military departments. It is contemplated that programs assigned to the Agency will be developed in coordination with the designated military departments to the point of operational use.

We propose to appoint a highly qualified Director for the Agency and start operations as quickly as possible. The Director will have authority to perform work directly with his own staff and facilities, to arrange for the performance of work by other agencies of the Government, including the military departments, and to enter into contracts with private business or educational and research institutions.

In order to permit the Advanced Research Projects Agency to be staffed with personnel of the caliber required to administer these programs effectively, authority is requested—and has been approved by the House—for the Secretary of Defense to create 15 professional and scientific positions and ten other positions in grades 16, 17, or 18 of the General Schedule in accordance with the procedures prescribed in the Classification Act of 1949, as amended, in addition to those now authorized by law. All the professional and scientific positions within the present Department of Defense allowance are already allocated to important research and development activities which must be continued, and we are informed by the Civil Service Commission that GS-16, 17 and 18 positions in the Government-wide pool are not available in sufficient numbers to staff this function.

X-15 Points Way To Space Flight

Lt. Gen. Donald L. Putt, Air Force Deputy Chief of Staff for Development, highlighted presentation ceremonies of the Harmon International Trophy in Washington, D. C., with the announcement that once the experimental X-15 rocket plane is proved successful, this country will be only "a step away from having a manned satellite."

He noted that the X-15, being built by North American Aviation and scheduled to be tested early in 1959, is "much more a space craft than an aircraft."

During ceremonies in the Nation's Capitol 3 February, Vice President Nixon presented miniatures of the prized trophy to Lt. Col. Frank K. Everest, Jr., USAF, who has flown the Bell X-2 rocket plane 1900 miles per hour, and Navy Lieutenant Commanders Malcolm D. Ross and Morton L. Lewis who flew in a balloon to an altitude of 76,000 feet in November 1956.

Exchange Service Provides $56,300,000 For Welfare Program; Family-Type Items In Greater Demand As Marriage Rate Rises

NEW YORK, N. Y.

THE Army-Air Force Exchange Service last year provided $56,300,000 from profits for military recreation and welfare activities throughout the world.

This contribution to morale and effectiveness is seen particularly significant in view of the attacks (THE JOURNAL 1 February) that reportedly will be made by some retail merchant groups before the House and Senate Appropriations Committees.

The object of these likely attacks will be to deny any appropriated fund support—such as use of MSTS cargo space for shipments overseas and pay of military supervisor personnel—to PX activities.

In response to inquiries, Exchange Service officials said here that about $26,000,000 is available from appropriated funds for PX support—most of it for Service families overseas.

Million For Improvements

In addition to the money allocated for recreation and welfare activities from PX profits, 1957 saw $16,900,000 allocated for new equipment and modernization and improvement of buildings.

Under command of Maj. Gen. Harlan C. Parks, USAF, with Brig. Gen. Roy T. Evans, USA, as Deputy Chief, the Exchange Service has 64,585 employees who offer American-manufactured merchandise and "back home" type services to military families in nearly 6000 direct-operated food, service and retail outlets.

Foreign Goods Shift?

Exchange Service officials concede that if appropriated fund support for PX activities overseas is curtailed, managers of many of these outlets undoubtedly will be forced to rely more and more on the use of foreign-made products at the expense of American manufacturers.

In addition to the 6000 direct outlets, the Exchange Service supervises over 5000 concessionaires.

Actually, the Exchange Service during the past year worked out a plan by which its responsibility for operation of individual outlets could be reduced in favor of increased authority for local commanders.

Family Items Increase

Exchange Service statistics show a significant upward trend in the sale of family items. This results largely from an increase in the military marriage rate.

At present, eight out of every 10 officers and noncommissioned officers are married. Families average 1.32 children.

This was a major reason why the House Armed Services Committee last year, in response to a Department of Defense proposal that was presented by the Exchange Service, agreed to allow PX's to sell baby furniture and extend the list of clothing items for children.

Per capita sales figures, which were $23.33 per month in 1953, reached $26.55 last year. The increase largely is the result of higher wholesale merchandise costs.

Another increase saw customers in U. S. exchanges spending more on food and services—7% more for food and 20% more for services. At present, 14 per cent of all exchange sales volumes come from food.

Key Military Personnel

In addition to General Parks and General Evans, other key military members of the Exchange Service staff include:

Col. Clarence C. Ailes, Director, Services Division.

Col. Jack B. McFarland, Plans and Programs.

Col. Robert P. Pike, General Counsel.

Col. Benjamin F. Wood, Director, Merchandising Division.

Lt. Col. Robert W. Endsley, Director, Administration.

Gen. Sarnoff Wins Top ROA Honor

The Reserve Officers Association will award its highest honor to Brig. Gen. David Sarnoff, USAR-Ret, whom ROA called "one of the outstanding Citizen-Soldiers this nation has produced."

General Sarnoff will be officially designated "Minute Man of 1958" at ROA's annual National Council Grand Banquet scheduled for Washington on 8 February.

ROA's National President, Brig. Gen. deLesseps S. Morrison, who is Mayor of New Orleans, said: "General Sarnoff's continued service to National Security and to the nation's Minute Man heritage has been so outstanding that there actually was none other proposed for the honor this year."

General Sarnoff, who is Chairman of the Board of the Radio Corporation of America, was cited particularly for his service as chairman of the National Security Training Commission, and for his "official and persistent efforts to alert the nation and its government to the dangers, the challenges, and the opportunities of the 'Cold War'."

"SeaMaster" To Be Used In Mine Warfare Strikes

Resumption of flight tests of the Martin Company's P6M "SeaMaster" marks a significant advance in the development of a major new anti-submarine warfare striking weapon," the Navy states.

VAdm. William V. Davis, Jr., Deputy Chief of Naval Operations for Air, said that upcoming production models of the mine-laying "SeaMaster" will be employed to go after enemy submarines in their home ports in the event of any big war.

"We hope," the Admiral said, "that we can disperse small units of these aircraft quite widely, some of them in areas where we cannot afford to keep larger forces. Their mobile bases would operate well back out of range of surprise attack.

"By refueling from submarines or other small units en route," the Naval Air Chief said, "the seaplanes could deliver mines or nuclear weapons against any targets along vast areas 2,000 miles or more from their tenders."

The "SeaMaster" was redesigned following loss of two prototype XP6M-1 planes. The new version, the first of 24 being built by the Martin Company, is capable of high-speed minelaying and photo-reconnaissance missions. Its hydraulic control system has been redesigned.

The new plane, now undergoing tests, is the first of six "evaluation" YP6M-1's which will be powered by four Allison J-71 turbojet engines with afterburners.

The remaining 18 are to be powered by four Pratt & Whitney J-75 turbojets.

Included among the design changes made in the new P6M are: 1, a change in the front configuration of the engine nacelles, in order to improve engineering performance (by making it possible to obtain more uniform distribution of air across the engine compressor faces); 2, a canting outwards of the two wing-top engine nacelles in order to eliminate afterbody fuselage heating by the afterburners; and 3, an extra tail fin fairing at the top of the fin, designed to reduce in-flight drag.

A full program of flight tests will be conducted by Martin test pilots before the new plane is turned over to the Navy for use at the Naval Air Test Center, Patuxent River, Md.

Powerful House Chairman Asks Stronger Anti-Missile Role For Army; Urges Speed

Chairman Carl Vinson (D., Ga.) of the House Armed Services Committee has asked Secretary of Defense Neil H. McElroy to give the Army full responsibility, both developmental and operational, for the Nike-Zeus anti-missile missile.

At the same time, he urged the Secretary to provide the Army with an additional $136 million to speed development of the anti-missile missile as a weapons system.

"If time is as important as I believe it to be in this particular area," the powerful House Member said, "then I must conclude that the expenditure of this additional sum is warranted and that a decision to this effect should be made at the earliest practical time."

Secretary McElroy previously had revealed to the Committee his decision to assign the Army total responsibility for development of the Zeus Missile System.

Cites Possible Strife

This decision was applauded by the Committee, but Chairman Vinson said he could not "escape the conclusion that there will continue to be some undesirable degree of service strife between the Army and the Air Force until you clearly assign operational responsibility."

Chairman Vinson said "it is quite clear" that development of the missile in accordance with Army doctrine will create situations which are incompatible with Air Force doctrine, should the Air Force subsequently be assigned operational responsibility.

Therefore, the Committee "cannot escape the conclusion that total responsibility, operational as well as developmental, should be promptly assigned to the Department of the Army."

Text of Letter

Here is the full text of Chairman Vinson's letter to Secretary McElroy:

Dear Mr. Secretary:

I want to take this opportunity to further discuss two aspects of the Nike-Zeus Program, which matter we had under discussion before the Committee in executive session during your testimony last week.

"As you know, Mr. Holaday announced to the Committee during his appearance as a witness, on the afternoon of January 17, your decision to assign to the Army total responsibility for the developmental program of the Zeus Missile System. Mr. Mr. Holaday also advised that, simultaneous with this assignment to the Army, you assigned to the Air Force total developmental responsibility for the early warning radar portion of the system.

Continued Concern

"Your action in reaching a decision on this matter was most encouraging to the Committee and the announcement met with spontaneous approval on the part of the Committee. But there are two additional aspects of this matter which continue to cause the Committee concern, and I want to express my judgment on each of them.

"In the first place, your decision limited the Army to the development phase of the Zeus Missile System, leaving operational responsibility yet to be determined. On the basis of similar type problems which we have discussed during our investigation, I cannot escape the conclusion that there will continue to be some undesirable degree of service strife between the Army and the Air Force until you clearly assign operational responsibility.

"In connection with the last mentioned point, it has become abundantly clear that when a given service is assigned responsibility for the development of a given weapon, whether or not such assignment is exclusive, that service will conduct its development along lines which are compatible with the doctrine of that service so far as deployment and use are concerned. Since your decision of January 16, we have developed further testimony on this point and it is quite clear that the development of the missile in accordance with Army doctrine on deployment and use will create situations which are quite incompatible with Air Force doctrine on deployment and use, should the Air Force subsequently be assigned operational responsibility for this particular weapons system.

Settle Remaining Problems

"So while the Committee heartily commends you for your decision of January 16, we cannot escape the conclusion that total responsibility, operational as well as developmental, should be promptly assigned to the Department of the Army. Such action on your part would settle those remaining problems and controversies which will not only endure but will increase in magnitude with the passing of time.

"My second consideration deals with the future availability date of the Zeus as an operational weapons system. The Committee is aware of the projected date when the system would become operational under current planning and financing. The Committee is also aware of the conclusions that the Russians will have a substantial operational capability for their IRBM and their ICBM systems within that period of time. If these assumptions are sound, and highly respected witnesses tell us they are, then time becomes a most important element in attaining an anti-missile capability. For this reason the Committee has required the Army to furnish its best estimates on the possibilities for accelerating the availability date.

Provide Added Funds

"We are advised that there has been presented to ASD (R&D) an accelerated program which would accelerate the availability date of the Nike-Zeus system by a period of approximately two years. We are further advised that if this period of time can be bought, additional substantial sums of money, in the approximate amount of $136,000,000 must be made available to the Army not later than April 1, 1958. The application of such a sum would permit the development of the Nike-Zeus on the basis of a weapons system, permitting the early procurement of the long lead time items in the immediate future. Of course, this involves a calculated risk and I realize that we cannot proceed on the development of every weapons system on the same basis. But if time is as important as I believe it to be in this particular area, then I must conclude that the expenditure of this additional sum is warranted and that a decision to this effect should be made at the earliest practical date.

"I regret the length of this letter but the considerations involved, both as to detail and importance, are such that they warrant a full discussion.

"With kindest regards, I am

"Sincerely,
CARL VINSON,
"Chairman"

ARMY CANCELS POLK HOUSING

The Army has canceled plans to construct a Capehart housing project at Ft. Polk, La.

A Pentagon statement emphasized that "no final decision concerning the future utilization of Ft. Polk has been made."

The decision to cancel the housing follows the earlier action in deactivation of the First Armored Division there. There has been subsequent speculation that Polk may be shut down.

Army Wins New Congressional Backing For Improved Role; Prestige Soars

The action is indicative of the Army's improved position on Capitol Hill.

Speedier Modernization

Another example of this new concern is evident in Chairman Vinson's recent statement that his Committee is "not satisfied by any means" with the progress which is being made in modernizing the Army. This field, he says, offers immense opportunities for improvement.

The Armed Services Committees and the Appropriations Committees in both Houses of the Congress have indicated, too, their inability to understand why the Army's capabilities in the satellite field were not put to better use, and why limitations were placed on the Army's missile role.

The incongruities which Congress sees in the 200-mile limitation on Army missiles are summed up in the following exchange between Representative Porter Hardy (D.-Va.) and Secretary of the Army Wilber M. Brucker, during recent closed-door testimony before the House Armed Services Committee:

Mr. Hardy—Let me make this plain. I am not concerned about who produces a missile, but I want to get one as fast as we can and the best one we can get, and if the Army was ahead, then the Army should have been given authority to proceed and not caused to reduce its work.

Secretary Brucker—Well, the facts were that at that time we had just therefore fired the Jupiter C missile in September, and the facts were completely revealed to the Department of Defense and the Secretary, personally, by me.

Mr. Hardy—That is exactly my point. At that time the Army had fired a missile 3,500 miles, as I understood your previous testimony.

Secretary Brucker—3,300 miles.

Mr. Hardy—Fired a missile in excess of 3,000 miles, which nobody else had done at that time, is that right?

Secretary Brucker—That is right.

Mr. Hardy—So because...

Secretary Brucker—As a matter of fact, nobody believed it was true when we first said it.

Mr. Hardy—Were you able to convince the Secretary that it was true?

Secretary Brucker—We did.

Mr. Hardy—But notwithstanding, that scientific achievement was brushed aside and you were told to stop. They were going to let somebody else come in this field, because you shot that thing too far? [Laughter.]

Testimony from many sources that the Army, had it been given the opportunity, could have outstripped Russia in the race to launch a satellite, also has confused Members of the Congress. Explanations that the scientific program was removed from the Army in order not to impede other projects essentially more military in nature have failed to soothe Congressional brows ruffled by the enormous propaganda advantage gained by the Russians in launching the first man-made moon.

Congressmen now point to the fact that the Army was able to launch the first U. S. satellite only weeks after it was permitted to re-enter the race. The globe-circling Explorer has sent Army prestige soaring.

Like Senator Mike Mansfield (D.-Mont.), Majority whip of the Senate, many of the Senators and Representatives believe that the Army's satellite success will help to restore the ground forces to their rightful place in the sun.

Senator Mansfield voiced a widely-held sentiment when he told the Senate, "I think that on too many occasions we have tended to downgrade the Army and to give most of the credit to the other Services."
